

Botworld Adventure

Botworld Adventure is an open-world RPG and is one of the most bright and vibrant games we have ever played on mobile, let's go directly to game-play.

You're the Botmaster and you have a team of AI-powered bots with lots of abilities, which you can upgrade, and yes you can upgrade the AI on the bots too. You have to collect scraps from the 12 unique zones in order to upgrade the bots and their abilities, and find blueprints to unlock new bots. When you're at home, which is called Scavenger's Landing, you'll meet a host of other colourful characters and go on challenges assigned to you by the mayor. This way, you're able to earn some coins, which you will need in order to upgrade your botarmy and make them stronger.

While collecting scraps around the map, you'll find other botmasters waiting for you to destroy you if you take their scrap. Like many mobile RPGs, Botworld Adventure also features an Auto-Battle mode, just tap on it and your bots will fight on their own and the more you upgrade their AI, the better your bots fight.

You gain experience when you win a battle and that is used to upgrade your bots, in addition to the coins you earn and other materials which you collect from all over the map.

The gameplay is soothing, if we talk about controls, you can move your character with a free joy-stick or mark the place where you want to go by tapping, and your botmaster will make its way to the spot. The music and even the sound effects in battles are amazing.

The game is still in early access so you'll notice some minor lags and glitches sometimes but other than that, we didn't really come across any issues.

Happy Zone

Happy Zone is a battle royale game developed by PARTY ROOM studios. The thing that sets this game apart from other games in this genre is its casual approach towards the battle royale genre. Usually, when we see 'battle royale' mentioned somewhere, we immediately think of a fast paced, high action, survival game with next gen graphics and mechanics. Well, Happy Zone does none of that. Instead, it focuses on just one thing - making battle royales as casual as possible.

In the game, you will be matched with just 12 other players and all the genre's common rules apply here i.e. you have to be the last one standing and there will be a circle or zone closing inwards, forcing players into a specific part of the map. Since the game is relatively new to the scene, it has only one map for now. But, for 12 players, the size of the map is plenty. You will be spawned in the outskirts of the map in a "jail - cell" and the other players too, will be spawned in similar "jail - cells".

Coming to the fighting mechanics, the player can be moved with a dynamic joystick which is - by default - mapped to your left thumb. For the right thumb, there are a number of things you can do. You have a roll button, a reload button, an emote button, a grenade button and a fire strike button. Notice how there's no fire button present here? Well, in this game, the fire happens automatically. That means that as soon as you are close enough to the enemy, the game will automatically fire your gun for you. Another thing that will happen automatically are the melee attacks. Whenever you are very close to the enemy, you will put your gun aside and start hitting the enemy with your fists. The "health" system in this game works a bit differently.

You will start with full health by default and your player will automatically heal if the health goes down. The healing process is slow but it will heal you fully if not interrupted.

You can upgrade the player, the weapon and even your robot via micro-transactions. The transactions will happen with the in-game currency which you can earn by completing challenges or opening chests or you can simply just buy them using real life money. There's also an option of the "Battle Pass". The free version will give you common chests and some rare ones from time to time and the paid one will obviously give rare and epic chests more frequently.

All in all, Happy Zone is a hyper casual battle royale game meant for all ages. If you are looking for a light-weight, addictive game to pass your time, we'd highly recommend that you try this one out.
