WHAT'S NEW

Marvel only pays $5,000 to comic creators for adaptations

Behind the films that rake in billions of dollars are comic book creators whose ideas lay the foundation of these uber-popular stories. According to Guardian, Marvel's standard approach to compensating these creators for their work that appears in Marvel Cinematic Universe films is a meagre $5,000 USD check along with an invitation to the film's premiere. The storylines and characters created by these writers or artists have raked in almost $23 billion USD over 24 MCU films. Jim Starlin, the writer who created the character Thanos made famous by the Avengers films, had to negotiate with Marvel for a more handsome payout. Ed Brubaker and Steve Epting who created the Winter Soldier have publicly stated that they made next to nothing. <https://digit.in/marvelcheapsout>
