are. We are going to give this a not because the prank can be harmful to pets as the beans contain ingredients not suitable for dogs.

DUMBSMART

This is a new word coined by Kevin Kelly that describes the AI in its current state, being incredibly smart at some things, but frustratingly dumb at others. It describes the experience for example of talking to artificial intelligence assistants, recommendation engines that go haywire, or machine translations that fail spectacularly. For the foreseeable future, AI is expected to remain dumbsmart, being very good at solving maths problems, or even reading human emotions, but very bad at, say, tying a shoelace. Head over to The Technium for more interesting ideas.

BOSS SCREEN

A boss screen is a screen within the game that gets triggered with a single click, that makes it look like you are working. There are more advanced software available that do the same for any game, which involves restoring the resolution, muting the audio, and hide the taskbar, in case the boss walks in on you playing Minesweeper or something. Here at Digit, we would be worried if someone does not have a game running at any given point of time. While it is a cool little feature if the game has an integrated boss screen, but otherwise Alt+Tab works just fine! There is no need for third party software, which seems like just the kind of thing to load up with ransomware or crypto miners, so we do not suggest the use of any such software.

SOCIAL HANGOVER

The social hangover is the real life version of zombies, needing to rest away from people to get over having engaged with a lot of them in a short period of time. This is a period of time to recover from the energies lost by the body in taking the effort of being social. We guess everyone can relate to burnout and needing time alone. However, there is no scientific evidence that anything like this exists, and the term may just be more psychobabble emerging from the pop psychology scene. Either way, this is a clear Not.

CARDENING

The inexplicable beings that feed off Instagram have given rise to the trend of growing fairy gardens or terrariums within cars. We suspect that the trend actually originated in a really filthy vehicle somewhere where stray seeds caught root, and were allowed to grow. Alternatively it might just be a deviant algorithm in "the framework", we do not know. The location of these gardens seem dubious... veering off course and crashing will result in the airbags deploying and a cactus lodged in painful places. It is a mystery how cardening even came about, because this seems to be a bizarre undertaking that can only be enjoyed by people who neither like their vehicles, nor plants. More greenery is always welcome, but we hope the plants are enjoying the ride!

PIBLINGS

English Professor Minrose Straussman has tracked nonbinary terms for siblings of parents, as well of offsprings of siblings. All aunts and uncles can be called publings, which is a mashup of parents and siblings, if you haven't figured it out yet. For those who identify themselves as gender fluid, the terms aunclie and untie or untie are available. For nieces and nephews, it gets a bit more complicated, with a number of permutations and combinations possible. In the 1950s itself, the gender neutral term nibling was coined, with the n coming from niece or nephew, and sibling. There is also niephling, which is an amalgamation of all three. Chibling and sibkid combine sibkid with gender neutral words for offspring. Then there are the various ways to mashup the words for niece and nephew, including neiph, nephiece and niephew. The idea here is to invetisize your own vocabulary when the English language fails to have gender neutral synonyms.

BUKATERIA

Nigerian in origin, this is the name for a roadside eatery that is not a restaurant, but has minimal seating arrangements. Think of these as roadside chinese food stalls with plastic stools that double up as tables. The Bukas in Nigeria from where the term originated, were usually female run eateries where primarily pre-prepared local food were served to customers at very cheap rates. The Buka's were also known as "Mama Puts", which literally comes from people saying "Mama, put this food for me to eat" while pointing out what they wanted to eat. There is no menu as such, and only one or two dishes are served.

UNCONSCIOUS BIAS

Unconscious bias is making unfair decisions against a particular group of people because of past experiences. Unconscious biases are commonly seen in workplaces, schools and communities, but have also spotted in AI algorithms that have picked up the biases from their human programmers. Vanderbilt University some tips for those who want to combat unconscious bias. These involve avoiding stereotypes and generalizations, learning to separate fact from feelings, involving a diverse group of people in decision making, engage in self reflection, practice empathy and do not expect a quick solution. d
