JAMES BOND

WATCHES

Here's a look at the timepieces which helped Agent 007 keep track of his mission times.

he marvellous gadgets and cars of the James Bond universe of films have a fan following as diverse as the movies themselves. There are several forums on the internet that discuss every aspect of these timepieces of fantastical engineering and brilliance. But there is another faction that has been paying close attention to the watches that 007 has sported since the start of the franchise, way back in the year 1962. While there is a lot to read about the specifics of each and every watch that Mr Bond has donned through the years on the big screen, here we bring you a selection of the watches that will help you geek out in the next Bond themed party, where you fashionably ask for a dirty martini, shaken not stirred.

OMEGA SEAMASTER 300M

The latest iteration of the Bond franchise, No Time To Die, saw Daniel Craig wearing an Omega Seamaster 300M 007 Edition. A different iteration of the very same model of the watch is seen in the 2015 Bond film Spectre. Bond is seen wearing the Omega Seamaster 300 M "Spectre" Edition in that film, which had a NATO strap. The retail copies of these watches have a water resistance of 300 meters.

OMEGA SEAMASTER PLANET OCEAN

Another watch that made multiple appearances in Bond films, Omega Sea-master Planet Ocean, was seen in Skyfall (2012) and Quantum of Solace (2008). In the 2012 film, Bond sported a special "Skyfall" edition of the watch, which could be seen on his wrist in the Turkey scenes from the film. Omega also made a special edition of the watch for the 2008 film, and Bond was seen wearing this 42mm steel watch piece in the movie on multiple occasions.

OMEGA SEAMASTER PRO 300M

The watch that started the iconic Omega and James Bond partnership, which gave the watch enthusiasts a lot to talk about. The Seamaster Pro 300M in its different incarnations was seen in the Bond films, which marked the start of the Pierce Brosnan era of on-screen Bond, in 1995, and were present through his stint, before Daniel Craig took over in 2006 and continued sporting the Seamaster Pro 300M, in his first film in 2006, Casino Royale.

ROLEX SUBMARINER

Before the millennials were Snap-chatting their favourite Bond moments, with their Omega watches, there lived a generation of people who saw the iconic secret agent wear a series of Rolex Submariner watches through the years. Probably one of the most recognized Bond timepieces of the yesteryears, Rolex Submariner was the king before the Omega era of Bond watches kicked in. The Swiss watch maker, delivered the Rolex
