

Squid Game token crashes

The scammers of $SQUID token earn more than $3.38 million it goes to 0$.
<https://digit.in/nov21-46>

Pay for movies with crypto

AMC Theaters now lets you buy digital gift cards with Dogecoin
<https://digit.in/nov21-56>

Submariner series of watches to the sets of the very first Bond film, Dr. No (1962). It also featured in From Russia With Love (1963), Goldfinger (1964), Thunderball (1965), On Her Majesty's Secret Service (1969), Live and Let Die (1973), The Man With the Golden Gun (1974), and License To Kill (1989).

TAG HEUER PROFESSIONAL NIGHT-DIVE

The only Tag Heuer watch to be ever featured in the James Bond film franchise, the Tag Heuer Professional Night-Dive was worn by Timothy Dalton in The Living Daylights (1987). The black case and bracelet of the watch, contrasted by a luminous dial, gave the watch a look that left its mark on everyone who was a keen watch enthusiast to notice the timepiece in the film.

SEIKO TV WATCH

One of the most advanced watches to have ever been featured in the history of James Bond films, the Seiko TV Watch, as seen in Octopussy (1983) had a literal TV screen on the watch face. While the screen was too small for any practical everyday use, for the James Bond fans of the yesteryears and even today, the watch remains something that puts everyone in awe of its engineering.

SEIKO M354 MEMORY BANK CALENDAR

The watch from Moonraker (1979)

may be the one that one could argue has the potential to dethrone the TV watch, from the same manufacturer. But the importance of the watch in the final scenes of the film trumps the back story/importance of most other watches worn in the series of films. Even though the film is almost 4 decades old, we would not spoil the story for the ones who have not seen it and would recommend all of you to see the it for yourself and find out what it was that made this watch so special.

SEIKO 0674 LC

The old-school Bond fans would instantly recall the iconic scene, as soon as they read, "007 TO REPORT HQ. IMMEDIATE M." For the ones not familiar with the reference, it is from The Spy Who Loved Me (1977), where the Seiko 0674 LC would print out tiny messages on a strip of embossing tape for Bond.

Cool right? It looks even better when it comes into play in the film. Ah... the good old days.

HAMILTON PULSAR P2 2900 LED WATCH

By the looks of it, nobody would not be able to guess that this simple timepiece is from a James Bond film. But it actually is. Donned by Agent 007 in Live and Let Die (1973), this simple LED watch was the first of its kind. The LED watches of the modern day do all sorts of things like alarms, date, day, have barometers in them, but this did not have anything. The very fact that it was the first time that an LED watch had been successfully produced for the masses was what made it so special and earned it a special place in the hearts of the James Bond fans.

BREITLING TOP TIME

Just like Tag Heuer, the Breitling Top Time was the only watch from the manufacturer to be seen on the wrists of James Bond. Thunderball (1965) was the film where the viewers got their first look at the watch on the wrist of Bond, and the odd shape instantly caught the attention of many. The watch doubled as a Geiger counter. This watch somehow appeared on the flea markets of England in 2013, where it was purchased for £25, but it turned the fortunes of the owner around, who then sold it in an auction for a whopping £100,000. 1