PC MASTER RACE – R/PCMASTERRACE

If you haven't already heard about the glorious PCMR, as they call themselves, we want to know your address because either your internet needs fixing or you literally are in a meditation centre, cut out from the noises of the world. Founded in 2011, the PC Master Race is a one-stop destination for all things PC. You can hang around all day, looking at some of the funniest PC related memes on the internet or get build advice.

Want to vent out about the latest AAA title? Join in on discussions about your favourite title and how it failed to live up to your expectations here *cough*CP2077*cough*. Have an urge to see someone doing that satisfying peel from their latest and greatest piece of PC hardware? Scroll enough, and we are sure that you will find a video here.

LINUX MASTER RACE – R/LINUXMASTERRACE

This is surely the place to be if you are someone who is a hardcore Linux user and want people of your elite breed to have discussions, debates and competitions with. This subreddit is filled with interesting content for all the intermediate to expert level Linux users. They call themselves a subset of the PC Master Race, so if you are someone, who is a part of that subreddit or internet community, then you may also find a bunch of like-minded individuals here. Oh, and the memes galore here too.

LINUX 101 – R/LINUX4NOOBS

As condescending as their subreddit's name might sound, the people here are here for you. If you are starting out and want to one day graduate to r/linuxmasterrace, this is the place to be at. They use the phrase noobs are welcome in their tagline but also say that questions are encouraged. Their basic modus operandi is to foster an environment where everyone who wants to learn about Linux can come and clear out all their doubts. Their first post itself is about how to migrate to Linux from operating systems like Windows 7 and 10, so you can see yourself graduating to the master race from the first second of being here. They also have a tool linked right on their front page, which would help you choose the Linux distro of your choice. The sidebar contains an extensive index of categories of topics so that you do not create unnecessary fresh discussions about your problems or spend hours skimming through the entire subreddit to get hold of an issue that you want to get sorted out.

CONSOLE MASTER RACE – R/CONSOLEMASTERRACE

Touted to be the "Home of 720p, 30 fps, and Mountain Dew", this is the community that you should definitely be a part of if you own a console and game on it. Everything you need from the world of consoles can be found here, the mods, news about the latest exclusives, and leaks about the next generation of portable gaming machines.

They do have an internal battle going on between which platform, the green or the blue one, is better. But, at the end of the day, everyone will pour their hearts out if you are in need of any help, as long as your posts are in the guidelines laid by the group.

LINUX GAMING – R/LINUX_GAMING

If you are one of the two people of your group who not only use Linux but also game on it, the r/linux_gaming is the place where you will find a lot of likeminded individuals who have been trying their best to bring the Linux gaming scene to the mainstream so that the big corporations take notice.

Everything tech companies, both on the software and hardware side, have not done, this community makes up for by building and fostering a healthy set of contributors who are always up to the task of helping their brethren get started with gaming on Linux. This is also the place where advanced and intermediary Linux gamers can look towards getting all the updates and news that they would ever need. Not only that but there is also a great selection of Github links to
