

Meze Audio Liric

We wouldn't blame you for not having heard of the Meze Audio brand. We are in the realms of niche Hi-Fi aficionados here. The Liric from Meze Audio is the latest headphone in their lineup and it also happens to be the first closed-back portable planar-magnetic headphones developed in conjunction with Rinaro Isodynamics. The Hybrid Array driver, created specially for Meze Audio by Rinaro Isodynamic, offers a dual shaped voice coil array which have been in a constant state of development since 30 years making the driver one of the lightest and most advanced planar magnetic drivers on the market today. Each driver is also entirely hand assembled and tested before they are given their spot in the headphones. When it comes to the build, the Liric has a genuine leather covered headband, a lightweight magnesium skeleton and copper coloured accents splashed across the unit. The headphones also have precision cut air vents which run from the ear cups to the ear pads and can utilise the acoustic volume from the ear pads and the ear cup chamber which keeps the size of the headphone compact without compromising on acoustic performance. You would have to shell out $2000 to get all that acoustic goodness though.

Xbox Series X by Gucci

Okay so what's better than an Xbox Series X? Some might say a PS5 of course but, there might be something even better than that. To celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Xbox consoles (feel old yet?) and the 100th anniversary of the Gucci brand, the two mega brands have collaborated to create a limited edition version of the Xbox Series X by Gucci. So what's so special about this special edition? Well, as mentioned earlier, it's a limited edition with only 100 of them ever seeing the light of day. Oh, and there is also the price. This console will set you back a whopping $10,000. The surface of the console gets laser-cut Gucci initials (GG) all over it serving two purposes which are the Gucci branding and the common acronym used by gamers to signify "Good Game". It also gets a vintage hard carrying case in which the console can be kept and that has the quintessential Gucci luggage designing with the Xbox branding displayed boldly on the front. Red and blue stripes are present on the carry case and on the controllers as well signifying the House Web Gucci connection. Lastly, this limited edition Xbox also gives you a Xbox Game Pass Ultimate subscription although how long that subscription lasts, we do not know.

Bimota KB4

Gorgeous Italian styling and Japanese engine and internals. Sounds like a match made in heaven when it comes to automobiles. And that seems to be the mantra that Bimota hopes to exploit when it comes to their KB4 retro-styled superbike. The company recently unveiled their new model at EICMA 2021 and here is what we know about it so far. The KB4 will feature the same engine that the Kawasaki Ninja 1000 SX uses and it has also borrowed the suite of electronics and rider aids from it. The claimed power output of the engine is 142hp and produces 111Nm of torque. When it comes to the rider aids, the KB4 features all the bells and whistles in the form of cruise control, ABS, lean-sensitive tech that regulates traction control and ABS, multiple power modes and a quick-shifter to go both up and down the gears. Oh and if you're wondering why the Bimota has so much tech borrowed from the Kawasaki, it is because Kawasaki now has a 49.9% stake in Bimota. In terms of the styling, Bimota claims it has taken inspiration from their bikes that were also built in collaboration with Kawasaki in the 70's and 80's. The retro-modern styling is prevalent throughout the bodywork like its round headlight, big bulbous tank, the little lower backrest behind the seat and the sculpted windscreens.
