

MOVIE

Finch

★★★★☆ | When we first saw the trailer for Finch, we thought that this would again be the same cliché post apocalyptic movie with the main hero fighting to survive and the movie will end with either the hero looking upwards at the sky with a country song playing in the background or it would end by sampling implying that “the hero has found company now. He goes on to live a happy life with his partner” and we thought the same for Finch too. But boy oh boy were we wrong and we were definitely in for a ride!

The story is set in a world where everything is destroyed by one solar flare. A solar flare hit the Earth, fried all the electronics and made big holes in the ozone layer. Now, it's too dangerous to step out in the day since the surface temperature is 150 degrees and you can get cancer almost instantly by the unfiltered UV radiation. Amidst all this chaos, we have the main character Finch Weinberg portrayed by Tom Hanks. He is the lone survivor with his robot Dewy going from place to place collecting food items to eat. In his spare time, he is working on a robot. A walking and talking robot whose sole purpose is to take care of Finch's dog.

And that's pretty much it. The plot of the movie is simple and sober. Although there is a lot to talk about the movie story-wise, we'll avoid giving out spoilers. What we really want to talk about here is Tom Hanks's acting and his ability to portray a particular character. We saw it in Cast Away and we saw the same thing in this movie too. His desire to get out of the hell he's living in. His ability to find peace and happiness in small things and his ability to convince the audience that – Yes, I am alone. This movie is all about trust. Trust between two people. Trust between two entities and we think that it conveys that message perfectly.

We highly recommend you to watch this movie. With family, with your kids, with your loved ones or even alone. And we bet the ending will make you cry.

ANIME

Dorohedoro

★★★★☆ | MAPPA, the studio behind some of the most famous anime of all time such as Jujutsu Kaisen, Kakegurui and even the upcoming S4 - Part 2 of our all time favourite Attack on Titan. Looking at the past of MAPPA, it's no secret that the studio likes to make animes which are set in a dystopian world, and Dorohedoro, is no exception.

Trust us when we say that Dorohedoro is a weird anime and it gets weirder and more chaotic as the story progresses. The main character is Caiman – a human with a lizard's head and his partner Nikaido. Caiman has lost all of his memories and cannot remember what he looked like before his head was turned into a lizard's head, he can't even remember who turned him into what he is in the first place! The anime is set in a dystopian world called “The Hole” whose residents are the practice chickens of sorcerers. The sorcerers' bodies emit smoke which allows them to use their magic. The magic comes in different types and effectiveness too. For instance, the antagonist of our story – En – can use his mushroom magic to make a doll of a living person, plant a mushroom in it and basically see and interfere with what that person is doing or Shin – one of the side characters – whose magic can cut a person up into thin slices and still keep them alive. Chaotic, right? These sorcerers come down to The Hole to practice their magic on common people who cannot use magic and the residents of The Hole have just accepted it. Caiman is a victim of such a magic attack but since he is still alive and functioning with a lizard's head on top of him means that he was practiced on by a powerful sorcerer with a mastery in transformation magic.

The thing with Dorohedoro is that the anime is chaotic but calm. Amidst of all the chaos, killing, blood and gore, the anime still finds time for some silly comedy here and there – which may come out as stupid but it helps in balancing out the insanity of the anime. Another thing which we really liked is that even though Caiman is the main character of the anime, the focus isn't always on him. Almost half of the anime is spent with the antagonists being the main characters and we get to take a peep into their backstories too. All in all, Dorohedoro is a must watch for anyone who wants to watch some psychological, horror anime with a lot of blood and gore with comedy sprinkled in between. The anime has 12 episodes which makes it perfect for a weekend binge and if you're feeling ambitious enough, we'd even recommend you to read the manga which gets even more chaotic than the anime.
