

COOLEST JAMES BOND CARS OF ALL TIME

Are you a James Bond fan?
Are you a petrolhead? Have we got a treat for you!

Atreya Raghavan | feedback@digit.in

Agent 007. Perhaps one of the most iconic names associated with cinematic history. A number of things come to mind when one hears the name James Bond. Perhaps a solitary yet dapper, charismatic, middle aged, englishman. The world's greatest spy, with a licence to kill. Or maybe tailored suits and expensive swiss watches. To a few others, it is likely the enticing women popularly referred to as 'Bond girls'. Or perhaps, "A Vodka Martini. Shaken, not stirred." Oh, and, let's not forget the gadgets straight out of science fiction. From the space lasers in Moonraker, to the jetpack in Thunderball, not to mention the X-Ray sunglasses in The World is Not Enough, and so on.

As probably already established, Bond films have something for everyone. And naturally, the world's greatest spy deserves to travel in style while going about his business of saving the world from megalomaniac villains, one at a time. So, for all the Bond fans and the petrolheads out there, we bring you a list of the five coolest Bond cars of all time

I) ASTON MARTIN DB5:

Bond's 1963 Silver Birch Aston

Martin DB5 is arguably the most famous, and perhaps, quintessentially "Bond" car of the lot. Starting with Goldfinger in 1964, the DB5 made also made appearances in Thunderball (1965) GoldenEye (1995), Tomorrow Never Dies (1997), Casino Royale (2006), Skyfall (2012), Spectre (2015) as well as No Time to Die (2021). It was equipped with a 4.0 litre straight-six engine, which, was mated to a 4-speed manual transmission, producing 282 horsepower and 390 Nm of torque. The car featured a number of gadgets like a bullet-proof rear screen, two front firing Browning .30 calibre machine guns, a homing beacon on a monochrome display concealed in the dashboard, a slick oil sprayer to help shake enemies off its tail, a smoke screen to reduce the enemy's visibility through the exhaust, revolving number plates to help conceal its identity, high pressure rear water cannons, and last but not the least, the beloved ejector seat, which Bond perhaps reserved for unwelcome passengers.

Image Source: <https://assets.catawiki.nl>

II) LOTUS ESPRIT S1:

The wedge shaped Esprit S1 was powered by a 2.0 litre Lotus 907 four-cylinder engine, which, mated to a 5-speed manual transmission, belted out 160 horsepower. Most people at the time, or even to-date may have not considered giving this car a second glance, had it not been for one crucial detail. The Esprit S1 Bond drove could, hold your breath, turn into a submarine! That's right! In the movie The Spy Who Loved Me (1979), the car splashed into the ocean following a chase in the mountains of Sardinia, following which, the wheels rolled back and fins extended in their place, turning the car into a submersible! Interestingly, it was revealed by Elon Musk in a recent tweet, that the car served as a source of inspiration for Tesla Cybertruck's design too!

Image Source: <https://lpinimg.com>

Image Source: <https://w0.pealpx.com>