

Disney MirrorVerse

Disney and Kabam partner together to bring you yet another hack-n-slash game with a somewhat ambitious storyline and character models which are very accurate yet a bit unsettling.

The game starts with a little bit of backstory as to what's happening and they say that two stars collided and formed different versions of the characters that we very well know and boy oh boy have Disney made full use of their characters. You'll see a plethora of different characters in the game from all the different franchises. From Monsters Inc to Pirates of the Caribbean, you get it all. The first character you get is Rapunzel, and in classic Rapunzel fashion, her weapon is a pan. The enemies are apparently a dark force that have suddenly appeared and Mickey was having trouble fending them off alone. (Yes, Mickey is a wizard in this game who is supposed to protect the mirror.

The game is a basic hack and slash in which you can move your character around pretty easily with the slide mechanics and considering how quickly you can attack consecutively, it makes it pretty easy to breeze through the levels that they have built.

Each level contains 3-4 stages with the first few stages being just a few enemies with the combination of a few melee fighters accompanied by ranged fighters and each level ends with a boss fight with each boss being a corrupted copy of a Disney Character such as Buzz Lightyear who also features on the icon of the game, Scar from The Lion King or even a character you may have already unlocked such as Rapunzel or Hercules.

Overall, the game is a fun way to pass the time if you can ignore the lifeless eyes of the character models that look only in one direction.

Race the Sun

Race the Sun is a game where you pilot an aircraft that is powered by solar energy and you need to manoeuvre through various kinds of obstacles. With 4 touchpoints for two simple controls, it is pretty easy to pick up which are steering left and right. If you press close to the centre of the screen in either direction, the aircraft steers just a little bit and if you press on either of the extremes, it steers more. The game has a few pickups which have different uses. The most basic one is the triangles you pick up that can be used to buy cosmetic upgrades in the in-game shop. There are differently priced trails that you can buy for your planes ranging from 100 triangles to more along with different planes themselves that cost 5000 triangles.

The second pick-up is the jump pick up which allows you to use it whenever you want to once picked up, giving you a chance to stay in the air after you've just launched yourself up a ramp and accidentally missed the second one. The third and last pick-up is the glow that increases the time that the sun stays up which is critical for you to keep your plane up. This pick-up is also comparatively rare compared to the other two previously described making the game very difficult to play due to the fast running timer of the sun. Coming down to the graphics that the game has, it reminds us of the blockbuster game Smash-Hit. With direct similarities to the shapes and perspectives, Race the Sun also adds an infinite X-axis for you to take your plane wherever you want to.

While the game shows great minimalistic graphics and easy to use controls, it also seems difficult to have a good score in the game due to the aforementioned quick timer and the lack of the glow pickup.

Overall, the game is an okay way to spend your time if you have nothing to do and no internet to spare as the game is also available offline.
