was clearly a white woman, also chipped in with her rather silly take. She claims that 'democracy' shouldn't be held hostage in the hands of a few and that billionaires like Musk should pay their fair share of taxes.

Jack Dorsey also endorsed Musk as he tweeted out that if there was one person that he trusted to take over Twitter, it would be Musk. High praise from the co-founder of Twitter.

This is par on course for celebrities of course, but now that Musk has firmly planted his foot in the domain of public discourse, this is only going to get much worse. Case in point, Elon Musk's close relationship with China.

THE CHINESE CANDIDATE

Right now, Twitter does an excellent job of marking and identifying Chinese state affiliated media such as CCTV, CGTN, etc along with state actors such as ministers and such. As we all know, China is notorious for its censorship and absolutist approach to shutting down dissent. Freedom of speech does not exist in China. Twitter isn't even accessible in the Chinese mainland. You can thank the Great Firewall for that.

Elon Musk also has close ties to the CCP, with China being the second largest market for Tesla. It complicates things when a Tesla Giga Factory is located in Shanghai. So what happens when the CCP threatens Musk with IP seizure and shutdowns if Twitter does not comply with Chinese censors? Even Lex Luthor stand in, Jeff Bezos has a good point once in a while.

Politicians all across the US were quick to jump on with their opinions and thoughts on the matter with Senator Ron DeSantis praising Musk for the acquisition. The Left weren't so happy though, with a large cadre of users wishing death on the billionaire.

ELON FIGHTS BACK

For all his talk, Elon has actually seemed to back up what he stated. Even if things go south from here, it's clear that the status quo has changed forever.

The madlad even joked about buying Coca Cola next! In fact, news outlets like WION even went as far as to report that Elon Musk was planning on introducing cocaine to Coca Cola. Clearly they didn't get the joke.

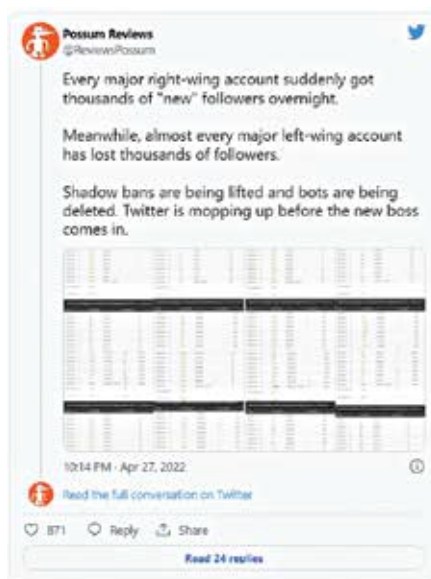

Another unintended consequence of the buyout is that banned accounts have come back. Right wing users have seen an uptick of followers while left-wing figures have seen a drop in follower count. We can't verify this but we have seen accounts that were banned make their way back to the platform.

It's gotten to the point where the Biden administration actually set up a 'Disinformation Governance Board'!

Where this all leads to is still a mystery. But we know one thing for
