

Kingdom Hearts 4 announced

Square Enix recently announced Kingdom Hearts 4 during the celebration of the franchise's 20th anniversary. There is however, no info on the game's exact release date yet, we just know it's happening.

Bye bye Bethesda launcher

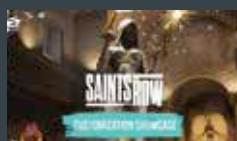

The Bethesda launcher will shutter for good on May 11 after 6 years of, well, existence. Bethesda has rolled out a method to seamlessly transfer PC games and currencies from the launcher to Steam.

Good news PS3 and Vita owners

While PlayStation had originally announced that access to the PS Store would end for the PS3, PSP and PS Vita this summer, they've realised it was dumb, and the store will remain operational. PSP will still retire as planned.

Saints Row customisation revealed

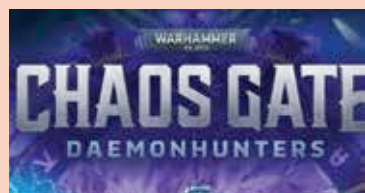

If you're familiar with the Saints Row franchise, then you know the upcoming SR game is going to be as crazy and wacky as they come. Of course, all of that applies to the customisation options available to you as well, which we got a good look at in the Saints Row Ultimate Customization Showcase. You've got a lot of customisation options for your Boss or main character. Of course, it doesn't end with the Boss. Even your ride can be customised to the tiniest detail not to mention extensive gun customisations. We break down all of the customisation options here: <https://dgit.in/src>.

Sony looking to place ads in games

In a report on Business Insider, Sony is now looking at adding ads in its free-to-play games. The company has reportedly encouraged its developers to look beyond the much-hated microtransactions and other cash grabbing features. What this could mean for the regular gamer is that you'll see in-game ads on billboards on sports games, in open-world games etc. In fact, Sony is looking at even rewarding gamers who have the zen-like ability to sit through droning ads. The report further states that the feature should launch by the end of the year, so saddle up.
