5. JOYEUSE:

One of the most legendary swords among the French, the Joyeuse was the Coronation sword of the French Kings. According to legend, this was the personal sword of Charlemagne, a great King of Franks and the first Holy Emperor. His empire was based on the ferocious strengths of the Franks. It was made by a famous blacksmith, Gallas, and it took 3 years to complete. The sword is also believed to have magical powers. It is a 38.5-inch sword which has a 24-karat gold and silver-plated hilt. This is one of the oldest surviving examples of French regalia and currently resides in the Louvre Museum in Paris.

6. NANATSUSAYA NO TACHI (SEVEN-BRANCHED SWORD):

It is referred to as the seven-branched sword because of its appearance. It has three pairs of branch-like protrusions along the central blade, making it look like a tree motif. The sword is a 74.9 cm long iron weapon made for ceremonial purposes. It dates back to the Jin dynasty of the fourth century. The King of Baekje gifted the sword to the Japanese king of Wa as a sign of praise and was later passed on to the Japanese empress. The text on the sword says that the sword was made from steel which was hardened 100 times, making it an unprecedented weapon. It is an important figure in history and depicts the relationship between the East Asian countries of that era. Currently, it is in the Isonokami Shrine where it's hidden from view.

7. CURVED SABRE:

The Curved Sabre belonged to the famous general of Argentina, Jose de San Martin. He was the most important leader of South America's independence struggle from Spain. The sword was one of the most cherished possessions of San Martin, which he purchased in London. He admired the Sabre's curved blade as it was very manoeuvrable and ideal for combat. The sword has a design that reads, "General Jose de San Martin". The sword was later passed to General Juan Manuel de Rosas. In 1897 the sword was sent to the National History Museum, Buenos Aires. However, it was stolen a few times, eventually being protected in a screened gazebo.

8. THE SWORD OF MERCY:

Also known as Curtana, and Edward the Confessor's sword. Edward was one of the last Anglo-Saxon Kings of England before the Norman Conquest of 1066. The sword is said to be made from special steel imbuing it with might. In 1236 it was given the name Curtana and since then it has been used in royal ceremonies. In ancient times, it was a privilege to bear this sword. The Sword of Mercy has a broken blade, which is cut short and square. It is part of the crown jewels of the United Kingdom and one of the five swords used during the coronation of the British monarch.

9. LA TIZONA:

The sword belonged to Rodrigo Diaz de Vivar, commonly known as El Cid, he was a Castilian Knight and war-lord in medieval Spain. He was a skilled military strategist and swordsman and the blade followed him throughout his conquests especially against the Moors. The sword is made of Damascus steel which was primarily used in the Middle East. The weapon is 40.5-inches and weighs about 2.4-pounds. It contains two inscriptions, one of them indicating the manufacture date, and the other quoting the Catholic prayer Ave Maria. The sword is currently on display at the Museo de Burgos, Spain.

10. TOMOYUKI YAMASHITA:

Tomoyuki Yamashita was a General of the Japanese Imperial Army during World War II. He became famous after conquering the British colonies in Malaya, and was known as the "Tiger of Malaya". During his military career, he owned a personal sword that contained a blade which was manufactured by famous sword maker Fujiwara Kanenaga between 1640-1680. The Samurai Sword was surrendered by Yamashita along with his army. The sword was taken to West Point Military Museum where it remains till this day.
