Sennheiser SPORT True Wireless

Sporty earbuds with divine sound

Sennheiser's reputation precedes itself in the audio community, and for good reason. The company has consistently launched some of the absolute best products in the industry over the years. While Sennheiser's latest SPORT True Wireless earbuds don't have some of the bells and whistles you get on competing TWS under ₹10K, what you do get is a promise of excellent sound quality paired with supreme comfort and fit. Does Sennheiser tip the scales in its favour compared to feature-rich Active Noise Cancelling TWS buds you get at this price point? Let's find out.

BUILD, DESIGN, AND FIT

The Sennheiser SPORT True Wireless earbuds bear immense resemblance to the Sennheiser CX 400BT that launched in 2020. The plastic build lacks a premium air though, especially when juxtaposed with the Sony WF-1000XM3, OnePlus Buds Pro, or the Jabra Elite Active 75t. The case's lid is decently built, however, it feels slightly flimsy. It is definitely bulky and will bulge out of pockets considerably.

The earbuds, quoting our 2020 review of the CX 400BT, have "a rounded-rectangle shape, kind of like a 'squirrel'". There's a noticeable push towards making these 'Sports' earbuds as well-fitted as possible, and you get an array of differently-sized ear tips and silicone tips to choose from. The combination of ear tips and wings makes for a fantastic, snug fit, rivalled only by a few on the market.

FEATURES

Since this one is the lower-priced model in Sennheiser's 2022 truly wireless lineup, features such as Active Noise Cancellation, multipoint connectivity, Qi wireless charging, on-ear detection, and more have been skipped out.

With these Sennheiser provides two different types of ear tips – Closed ear adapters that attempt to minimise ambient sound and Open ear adapters that should let you stay aware of your surroundings. This is coupled with specific EQ modes within the app to get the intended experience – Focus for the Close ear adapters and Aware for the Open ear ones. Sadly, both modes didn't really give stellar results.

Inside the Sennheiser Smart Control app, users can tweak the sound using the EQ. However, it is only a 3-band EQ which limits how much you can fiddle around with the sound. You can use the app to customise touch controls and you can customise actions too.

Apart from the features listed above, they also come packing an IP54 dust and water resistance rating. This is especially useful if you go gymming or hiking with your earbuds.

PERFORMANCE

Equipped with the very same 7mm TrueResponse transducers present on the Sennheiser Momentum True Wireless 3, the Sennheiser SPORT True Wireless sound divine. Their frequency response is almost identical to that of the MTW 3 which explains the similarity in sound quality.

The bass is slightly boosted on these, but there's no sign of muddiness, which is excellent in this price range. The mids are close to neutral causing them to sound excellent in the mix. The highs are under-emphasised after 4 kHz, but Sennheiser does this to minimise the frequency of sound that causes listening fatigue.

Moving on to the microphone performance, the earphones come packing two beamforming microphones per earbud. During phone calls, the caller's voice sounds crisp with minimal distortion. However, when you are in a noisy area, ambient sounds aren't suppressed enough.

BATTERY LIFE

In our testing, with the volume levels set to around 60 per cent, we got an excellent 8 hours and 20 minutes of runtime. The case provides another 27 hours of juice to the buds and comes with a USB Type C charging port.

VERDICT

The Sennheiser SPORT True Wireless is an excellent pair of sporty TWS earphones for audiophiles or those who love the balanced and detailed sound. It is an impressive introduction for Sennheiser in the highly-contested sports TWS category. You've got stellar sound quality and impressive battery life. Add to that customisable controls and excellent fit, and you've got a pretty solid pair of earphones under ₹10K. The only deterrent to success here is that it lacks some appealing features provided by competitors.
