Artery Gear: Fusion

This post-apocalyptic JRPG immerses players in a world where the last survivors of humanity fight for sustenance against being puppetised. Puppet Masters have crippled the planet, reducing humans to ragdolls to do their bidding. Humans have established elite armies of cybernetically advanced female warriors known as Artery Gear to fight eradication. The visual effects are incredible, the character illustrations are stunning, and the mech parts are seamlessly integrated into the waifus. The user interface is also smooth and refined, with delightful Live 2D effects for the AGs. The AGs are presented in cute chibi form during combat, with snazzy skill animations that can be toggled on or off in Settings. You can also set the battles to run on Auto if you want. You can customise how much energy you want to use in auto battles, if you want to stop when someone reaches their maximum level, and even how you would like to continue after defeat. When you're in auto mode, you also could set the A.I. to follow a specific strategy in the actual battles. Artery Gear: Fusion distinguishes itself primarily through such QoL features. You can also see a summary of the narrative whenever you want to skip ahead, and also rewatch it all from the Story Review feature. These elements all feel extremely well-thought-out as if the developers listened to community needs and compiled the best aspects of existing gacha MMO titles into a nice package.
